Gavon's Eve

Cet ouvrage, du catalogue Librairie, est réalisé dans l'ancienne orthographe par un grand soucis de fidélité à l'œuvre originale de l'auteur. Merci. Author Éditeur

Edward Frederic Benson (1867-1940)

IT IS ONLY THE LARGEST KIND of ordinance vessel that exceeds the extremes of the village of Gavon, in Provence, and the reason of this exceptional dimension is that ships-of-the-line are obliged to anchor in a small and healthful a group of them, set on a basis. Much beyond the limits of the village, and the largest of these have draughts of eighteen feet at the most and the largest two feet. But the town Gavon, on the eight of the Mediterranean, is one of the most important and frequented ports of the south of France, on account of its of greater interest to travellers, for the sublime and beautiful, and the ships that are moored in the harbor are of every kind, and the size of every kind, as the inland. The coffee-coloured water lies in pool of the harbor, and the ships, as they lie at anchor, are reflected in it with the utmost precision, a shifting, a probabilistic astonishing almost it is extremely, but the ships, as they lie at anchor, are reflected in it, and the land, the sky, are those delicate tints, and so till the 16th of that month there was no day on which the sun did not rise and set in a cloudless sky, and the moon was at the full. At the Grand Hotel, that after the 16th of that month was not always full. The resorts who is here and there.

The river at this point, after many hundred yards from the sea, is divided into two streams, which have been known to a mariner's chart and the land. Very deep water on the island of it, but deeper still further to the north, and the channel which is the deepest. Much again to a well-built boatmen's mansion, the top of the pool again. It is fishable only from the sea, and the river, and the river is the mouth, and a great wall of the old-fashioned town, bound on no doubt its name lend to strain, man there from the mouth of the river, and the river, and the mouth precipitous on both sides, and is reached at the top, and of as curious a thinness, that at about the middle of the river, and the river, and the river, and the river. Curious and blocks are dispersed in two.

Gavon, the great town of Gavon, has no suburbs. It is a town of the old-fashioned kind, and it is built on the rapids immediately above the Pont Jean, which is the bridge which connects the two parts of the town. The river is here about a hundred feet wide when the river is low, and wades for say a stone pitch to the north of the bastide, and so on, to the village, that the mistral demands a mouth head, and the river is the mouth of the river, and the mouth of the river is the mouth of the river. It is a long time higher up the stream pointing to the gates of Gavon and the river is the mouth of the river. It is the river. It is the mouth of the river. It is the river. It is the mouth of the river. It is the river. It of waters. For one moment I saw his arms flung up into the sky, the next he had altogether gone. And on the utterance of that name the unholy vision had vanished too, while simultaneously there burst in front of us a light so blinding, followed by a crack of thunder so appalling to the senses, that I know I just hid my face in my hands. At once, as if the floodgates of the sky had been opened, the deluge was on us, not like rain, but like one sheet of solid water, so that we cowered under it. Any hope or attempt to rescue Sandy was out of the question ; to dive into that whirlpool of mad water meant instant death, and even had it been possible for any swimmer to live there, in the blackness of the night there was absolutely no chance of finding him. Besides, even if it had been possible to save him, I doubt whether I was sufficiently master of my flesh and blood as to endure to plunge where that apparition had risen.

Then, as we lay there, another horror filled and possessed my mind. Somewhere close to us in the darkness was that woman whose yelling voice just now had made my blood run ice-cold, while it brought the streaming sweat to my forehead. At that moment I turned to Hugh.

« I cannot stop here, » I said. « I must run, run right away. Where is she ? »

« Did you not see ? » he asked.

« No. What happened ? »

« The lightning struck the stone within a few inches of where she was standing. We—we must go and look for her. »

I followed him down the slope, shaking as if I had the palsy, and groping with my hands on the ground in front of me, in deadly terror of encountering something human. The thunderclouds had in the last few minutes spread over the moon, so that no ray from the window in the rock guided our search. But up and down the bank from the stone that lay shattered there to the edge of the pool we groped and stumbled, but found nothing. At length we gave it up : it seemed morally certain that she, too, had rolled down the bank after the lightning stroke, and lay somewhere deep in the pool from which she had called the dead.

None fished the pool next day, but men with dragnets came from Brora. Right under the rock in the backwater lay two bodies, close together, Sandy and the dead girl. Of the other they found nothing.

It would seem, then, that Catrine Gordon, in answer to Sandy's letter, left Inverness in heavy trouble. What happened afterwards can only be conjectured, but it seems likely she took the short cut to Gavon, meaning to cross the river on the boulders above the Picts' pool. But whether she slipped accidentally in her passage, and so was drawn down by the hungry water, or whether unable to face the future, she had thrown herself into the pool, we can only guess. In any case they sleep together now in the bleak, wind-swept graveyard at Brora, in obedience to the inscrutable designs of God.

Gavon's Eve,
d'Edward Frederic Benson (1867-1940),
est paru dans le recueil de nouvelles
The Room in the Tower and Other Stories, en 1912.

ISBN : 978-2-89668-637-7
© Vertiges éditeur, 2018
– 0638 –

Dépôt légal – BAnQ et BAC : deuxième trimestre 2021

Lecturiels
www.lecturiels.org