Marriage a la mode

Allen Ingram Travel Fellowship 2015
Cambridge Arts & Humanities Research Council
Collection & Travel Grant, Emmanuel College, Cambridge

Emmanuel, Katherine Mansfield (1888-1923), on visit
Cambridge Arts & Humanities Research Council

MARRIAGE À LA MODE

[ON SET 001] At the station Williams remembered nothing. He had a confused impression that he had been talking and laughing to Mrs Williams, but I don't know for sure! Even on the train. They were in a carriage by themselves. Mrs Williams sat in a corner, looking out of the window. Williams sat opposite. He had a feeling that she had been crying, but when he looked at her she was powdering her face. Then Williams remembered that he had a cigarette case. He took it out and offered it to his companion. She refused, and he lighted one himself and leaned back.

Then the train moved, stopped suddenly, and the door was flung open. Williams was thrown forward, dreadfully sea-sick and hungry. Outside others were getting out, and he could see the platform, with its familiar advertisements and the familiar faces of porters and loafers. He was home. He was home, and he was sick, sick as a hound. Oh! Ladies' Lunch Room, he thought, and Refreshments. Oh! Tea and Coffee. Oh! Ham and Eggs. Oh! Bath Buns. Oh! Sandwiches. Oh! Pork Pies. Oh! Sausage Rolls. Oh! Pickled Onions. Oh! Sick and Sorry. Oh! Mrs Williams. Oh! Home.

He staggered to it on a pale, little bench. It was filled with people, but he managed to get there. He sat down, and he was sick. Then he felt better. He sat with them one moment. Then he rose, and he looked at Mrs Williams.

Mrs Williams was sitting, her head resting on her hand, her face hidden by the shadow of her hand. Williams looked at her. He looked at the others. They were all looking at Mrs Williams. Then she turned her head, and he looked at her