The Adventure of the Bruce-Partington Plans

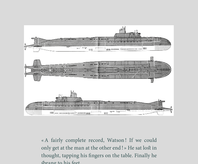
Conrad Thys Kingston (last man), in a car worth £12. Photo, 6.7.11. Conrad Thys Kingston (last man), in a car worth £12. Photo, 6.7.11. Photo, 6.7.11. Photo, 6.7.11



« A fairly complete record, 'Watson? If we could only get at the man at the other end.' » He sat lost in thought, tapping his fingers on the table. Finally he sprang to his feet.

« Well, perhaps it won't be so difficult, after all. There is nothing more to be done here, Watson. I think we might drive round to the offices of the Daily Telegraph, and so bring a good day's work to a conclusion. »

Mycroft Holmes and Lestrade had come round by appointment after breakfast next day and Sherlock Holmes had recounted to them our proceedings of the day before. The professional shook his head over our confessed burglary.

« We can't do these things in the force, Mr. Holmes, » said he. « No wonder you get results that are beyond us. But some of these days you'll go too far, and you'll find yourself and your friend in trouble. »

« For England, home and beauty – eh, Watson? Martyrs on the altar of our country. But what do you think of it, Mycroft ? »

« Excellent, Sherlock ! Admirable ! But what use will you make of it ? »

Holmes picked up the Daily Telegraph which lay upon the table.

« Have you seen Pierrot's advertisement to-day ? »

« What ? Another one ? »

« Yes, here it is :

« To-night. Same hour. Same place. Two taps. Motif vitally important. Your own safety at stake. PIERROT.

« By George ! » cried Lestrade. « If he answers that we've got him ! »

« That was my idea when I put it in. I think if you could both make it convenient to come with us about eight o'clock to Camberwell Gardens we might possibly get a little nearer to a solution. »

« Of course, Sherlock Holmes's characteristics of Sherlock Holmes was his power of throwing his brain out of action and switching all his thoughts on to lighter things whenever he had convinced himself that he could no longer work to advantage. I remember that during the whole of that memorable day he loll himself in a monograph which he had undertaken upon the Polyphonic Motets of Lassus. For my own part I had none of this power of detachment, and the day, in consequence, appeared to be interminable. The great national importance of the issue, the subtlety in high quarters, the dread nature of the experiment which we were trying – all combined to work upon my nerve. It was a relief to me when at last, after a light dinner, we set out upon our expedition. Lestrade and Mycroft met us by appointment at the outside of Gloucester Road Station. The area door of Oberstein's house had been left open the night before, and it was necessary for me, as Mycroft Holmes absolutely and indignantly declined to climb the railings, to pass in and open the hall door. By nine o'clock we were all seated in the shady, waiting patiently for our man.

An hour passed and yet another. When eleven struck, the measured beat of the great church clock seemed to sound the dirge of our hopes. Lestrade and Mycroft were fidgeting in their seats and looking twice a minute at their watches. Holmes sat silent and composed, his eyelids half shut, but every sense on the alert. He raised his head with a sudden jerk.

« He is coming », said he.

There had been a battue duty past the door. Now it returned. We heard a shuffling sound outside, and then two sharp taps with the knocker. Holmes rose, motioning to us to remain seated. The gas in the hall was a mere point of light. He opened the outer door, and then as a flash of light slipped past him he closed and fastened it. « This way ! » we heard him say, and a moment later our man stood before us. Holmes had followed him closely, and as the man turned with a cry of surprise and alarm he caught him by the collar and threw him back into the room. Before our prisoner had recovered his balance the door was shut and Holmes standing with his back against it. The man glared round him, staggered, and fell senseless upon the floor. With the shock, his broad-brimmed hat flew from his head, his cravat slipped down from his chin, and there were the long light beard and the soft, handsome delicate features of Colonel Valentine Walter.

Holmes gave a whistle of surprise.

« You can write me down an ass this time, Watson, » said he. « This was not the bird that I was looking for. »

« Who is he ? » asked Mycroft eagerly.

« The younger brother of the late Sir James Walter, the head of the Submarine Department. Yes, yes, I see the fall of the cards. He is coming to. I think that you had best leave his examination to me. »

We had carried the prostrate body to the sofa. Now our prisoner sat up, looked round him with a horror-ridden face, and passed his hand over his forehead, like one who cannot believe his own senses.

« What is this ? » he asked. « I came here to visit Mr. Oberheim. »

« Everything is known, Colonel Walter, » said Holmes. « How an English gentleman could behave in such a manner is beyond my comprehension. But your whole correspondence and relations with Oberheim are within our knowledge. So also are the circumstances connected with the death of young Cadogan West. Let me advise you to give at least the small credit for repentance and confession, since there are still some details which we can only learn from your lips. »

The man grasped and sank his face in his hands. We waited, but he did not speak.

« I can assure you, » said Holmes, « that every essential is already known. We know that you were pressed for money ; that you took an impress of the keys which your brother held ; and that you entered into a correspondence with Oberheim, who answered your letters through the advertisement columns of the Daily Telegraph. We are aware that you went down to the office on the fog on Monday night, but that you were seen and followed by young Cadogan West, who had probably some previous reason to suspect you. He saw your theft, but could not give the alarm, as it was only too possible that you were taking the papers to your brother in London. Leaving all his private concerns, like the good citizen that he was, he followed you closely in the fog and kept at your heels until you reached the very house. There he intervened, and then it was, Colonel Walter, that to treason you added the more terrible crime of murder. »

« I did not ! I did not ! Before God I swear that I did not ! » cried our wretched prisoner.

« Tell us, then, how Cadogan West met his end before you laid him upon the roof of a railway carriage. »

« I will. I swear to you that I will. I did the roll. I confess it. It was just as you say. A Stock Exchange debt had to be paid. I needed the money badly. Oberheim offered me five thousand. It was to save myself from ruin. But as to murder, I am as innocent as you. »

« What happened, then ? »

« He had his suspicions before, and he followed me as you describe. I never knew it until I was at the very door. It was thick fog, and one could not see three yards. I had given two taps and Oberheim had come to the door. The young man rushed up and demanded to know what we were about to do with the papers. Oberheim had a short life-preserver. He always carried it with him. As Weil forced his way after us into the house Oberheim struck him on the head. The blow was a fatal one. He was dead within five minutes. There he lay in the hall, and we were at our wit's end what to do. Then Oberheim had this idea about the trains which halted under his back window. But when he examined the papers which I had brought, He said that three of them were essential, and that he must keep them. You cannot keep them, said I. There will be a dreadful row at Woolwich if they are not returned. « I shall keep them, » said he, for they are so technical that it is impossible in the time to make copies. » Then they must all go back together tonight, » said I. He thought for a little, and then he cried out that he had it. « Thou ! will keep, » said he. « The others we will draft into the pocket of this young man. » Here he is found the whole business will assuredly be put to his account. I could see no other way out of it, so we did as he suggested. We took the body to a door at the window before a train stopped. It was so thick that nothing could be seen, and we had no difficulty in lowering Weil's body on to the train. That was the end of the matter so far as I was concerned. »

« And your brother ? »

« He said nothing, but he had caught me once with his keys, and I think that he suspected. I read in his eyes that he suspected. As you know, he never held up his head again. »

There was silence in the room. It was broken by Mycroft Holmes.

« Can you not make reparation ? It would ease your conscience, and possibly open punishment. »

« What reparation can I make ? »

« Where is Oberheim with the papers ? »

« I do not know. »

« Did he give you no address ? »

« He said that letters to the Hotel du Louvre, Paris, would eventually reach him. »

« Then reparation is still within your power, » said Sherlock Holmes.

« I will do anything I can. I owe this fellow no particular good-will. He has been my ruin and my downfall. »

« Here are paper and pen. Sit at this desk and write to my dictation. Direct the envelope to the address given. That is right. Now the letter :

« Dear Sir : « With regard to our transaction, you will no doubt have observed by now that one essential detail is missing. I have a tracing which will make it complete. This has involved me in extra trouble, however, and I must ask you for a further advance of five hundred pounds. I will not trust it to the post, nor will I take anything but gold or notes. I would come to you abroad, but it would excite remark if I left the country at present. Therefore I shall expect to meet you in the smoking-room of the Charing Cross Hotel at noon on Saturday. Remember that only English notes, or gold, will be taken.

That will do very well. I shall be very much surprised if it does not fetch our man. »

And it did ! It is a matter of history – that secret history of a nation which is often so much more intimate and interesting than its public chronicles – that Oberheim, eager to complete the coup of his lifetime, came to the lure and was safely engulfed for fifteen years in a British prison. In his trunk were found the invaluable Bruce-Partington plans, which he had put up for auction in all the naval centres of Europe.

Colonel Walter died in prison towards the end of the second year of his sentence. As to Holmes, he returned refreshed to his monograph upon the Polyphonic Motets of Lassus, which has since been printed for private circulation, and is said by experts to be the last word upon the subject. Some weeks afterwards I learned incidentally that my friend spent a day at Windsor, whence he returned with a remarkably fine emerald tie-pin. When I asked him if he had brought it, he answered that it was a present from a certain gracious lady in whose interests he had once been fortunate enough to carry out a small commission. He said no more, but I fancy that I could guess at that lady's august name, and I have little doubt that the emerald pin will forever recall to my friend's memory the Adventure of the Bruce-Partington Plans.

Arthur Conan Doyle

The Adventure of the Bruce-Partington Plans, une enquête de Sherlock Holmes racontée dans une nouvelle d'Arthur Conan Doyle (1859-1930), est parue dans le Strand Magazine, en décembre 1908, avant d'être ajoutée à son recueil His Last Bow (Son dernier coup d'archet) publié à Londres et à New York en 1917.

ISBN : 978-2-89816-965-2
© Vertigo éditeur, 2023

– 1 964e lecturiel –

Dépôt légal – BAnQ et BAC : premier trimestre 2023

Lecturiels
www.lecturiels.org